"MADNESS, RISEN FROM HELL", The Great Cultural Revolution of China

Mao Tse-Tung, the mad monster who ruled China in a manner similar to that in which Ivan the Terrible had ruled Russia, was worried. He thought his lieutenants were infringing upon his absolute monopoly of corruption and power. He sought to find some way through which he could chastise and discipline them. He decided to use a method which had been advocated by the doomed Communist, Leon Trotsky, during the early years of Bolshevik rule in Russia.

Like Lenin before him, Trotsky was alarmed because Communist bureaucrats tended to become corrupt and self-indulgent once they were in power. They lost their early zeal and pristine fervor. He believed that the students manifested the purest revolutionary passion, and urged the use of the students as a scourge to purge the ranks of the Soviet Communist Party.

Mao decided to follow the advice of Trotsky and to harness the rebellious rage of youth. In August, 1966, he launched the "Great Cultural Revolution" in China.

Planned Madness

The Great Cultural Revolution became an orgy of sadistic madness. The schools were closed and the students were urged to become little Red Guards, and to attack their elders whether they were parents, teachers, or government officials. Mao's slogan was, "It is right to rebel."

The police were ordered to stand by and provide the Red Guards with information about the five categories upon which they should vent their wrath. These five categories were: 1) landlords, 2) rich peasants, 3) reactionaries, 4) bad elements, and 5) rightists. The rightists included many, if not most, of the senior members of the Communist Party itself.

The mobs attacked, tortured, and often killed any individuals whom they considered to be included in one of these categories. The Pulitzer Prize-Winning Author, Harrison E. Salisbury, describes the horrors that became routine, in his book, "The New Emperors", which was published in 1992. He writes:

"On August 26 the police in Daxing County, on Beijing's northern outskirts, gave the local Red Guards lists of names, telling the adolescents these people were 'dangerous elements.' By August 27 the beatings had gotten under way. Within a week more than 125 people in the country had the life beaten out of them in the streets and public squares before raving crowds. The toll reached 300 within days. The oldest 'enemy' beaten to death was an eighty-year-old grandmother, the youngest, a thirty-eight-day-old baby. A single blow to the head was enough to split their skulls and leave them lifeless corpses in the dust. Twenty-two families were wiped out.

"The police-triggered terror went on mercilessly. Village gendarmes gave the swaggering youngsters the names of former residents who had moved into the city. They were summoned back. As they descended from the trains, village bullies clubbed them down and finished them off in minutes. For them there were no trials or struggle sessions. Two elderly sisters who had lived quietly in a Beijing hutong for twenty years (once concubines or servants in a landlord's house) were called back. They were dead almost before the locomotive of the train that brought them could let off the steam from its boiler. Red Guards set upon them as they kowtowed for mercy. The louts beat the women on the head, on the bosom, on the back, and hurled them into a pit, half-dead, tossing shovelfuls of earth on the heaving bodies. Some 5,000 were killed by these savages in the regions adjacent to Beijing.

"No place in China was secure from the terror. In distant Guangzi an estimated 67,500 people were killed. In Mongolia the toll ran to hundreds of thousands. In Tibet and Sichuan it was much the same. One eminently knowledgeable Chinese estimated the total victims of the ten years of madness as 4 million. 'no one else will tell you that,' he said." (Pages 248 - 249)

Ugly and Primitive Brutality

The brutality was ugly and primitive. Salisbury writes:

"There was no style about the beating parties, nothing like the BRIO with which Rome hurled Christians to hungry lions. Beijing's sport resembled a pack of jackals setting on a crippled deer. The victims were bound hand to foot, dumped on a floodlit stage. The audience would shout and drool as the murderers set about their act...

Jealousy--the Red-Eyed Disease

"To Chinese suffering from the red-eyed disease, it was heaven. A penciled denunciation (unsigned) would deliver their enemy to the public stage, where they could watch the death agonies on an ensuing night...

"The daughter of one of China's distinguished scholars, looking back on these times after twenty years, said with eyes hard as flint: 'We became beasts. There was not a human being left in China. We were worse than beasts. At least beasts do not slaughter their own kind.'" (Pages 249 - 250)

Methods in Mao's Madness

As Shakespeare says in his play Hamlet, "Though this be madness, yet there is method in it." Mao's major objective was to eliminate every possible rival for top leadership of the Communist Party, and for supreme ruler of China. His paranoia convinced him that his power was endangered. He feared becoming an "elder statesman", while the major decisions were made by others. His major suspicion focused upon the second-in-command in the Communist Party and the Chinese Government. This individual was Liu Shao-Chi who served as President of China, and Secretary of the Chinese Communist Party.

Mao's power was derived from his position as Chairman of the Communist Party, and the enormous prestige he possessed for having led the forces of the Chinese Communist Party to victory in the war against the forces of Chiang Kai-Shek. Liu also had great prestige in the Communist Party since he had taught and guided many of its leaders. His lectures and book entitled, "How to be a Good Communist", had served as a training manual for both leaders and members of the party. His central teaching was that every Communist should dedicate himself or herself unreservedly to the service of the Communist Party, even unto death. He wrote:

"Whether or not a Communist Party member can absolutely and unconditionally subordinate his personal interests to the Party's interests under all circumstances is the criterion with which to test his loyalty to the Party, to the revolution and to the Communist cause.

"To sacrifice one's personal interests and even one's life without the slightest hesitation and even with a feeling of happiness, for the cause of the Party, for class and national liberation and for the emancipation of mankind is the highest manifestation of Communist ethics. This is a Party member's highest manifestation of principle. This is the manifestation of the purity of proletarian ideology of a Party member." (You Can Trust the Communists (to be Communists), page 40)

At the beginning, the Red Guards attacked local individuals and lower Communist bureaucrats, but they were egged on by the wife of Mao Tse-Tung, Jiang Qing, and official literature, which spoke of the heinous crimes of the "No. 1 Capitalist-Roader in the Communist Party." This mysterious individual was later identified as none other than the President of China, Liu Shao-Chi. The day came when he and his family were to experience the consequences of Mao's blood-lust.

(The arrest, trial, torture and death of Liu Chao-Chi will be described in the July newsletter.)

THE WORLDWIDE RESURGENCE OF COMMUNISM

The prestigious British magazine, THE ECONOMIST, states in its April 16-22 edition: "Not so long ago Europe's Communists were assumed to be decomposing quietly on the rubbish heap of history. Now they are back." The same statement describes the Communists of the U.S.A., where the Communist Party, USA, is making significant progress.

The central ideas of Marxism and Communism are deeply entrenched in the social and political life of many nations. For literature, tapes and videos which provide evidence of this, and evidence of the pathological social consequences that flow from it, write to the CHRISTIAN ANTI-COMMUNISM CRUSADE, P.O. AFRICAN ANTI-COMMUNISM SEMINARS - March, 1994

By Rev. James Colbert

As I prepared to journey to Africa in March, to conduct anti-Communism seminars in the African states--in Kenya, Malawi, Zimbabwe, Zambia, and Uganda, I confess to experiencing a measure of apprehension. I was aware that some of these countries were ruled by Marxist-Socialist governments which had recently come to power through civil wars, and I was sustained by our Lord's promise that He accompanied His sheep where He sent them. Nevertheless, I advised my hosts concerning what they should do if I were arrested and incarcerated. Fortunately, that did not occur.

Our Lord once said that the last shall be first, so I will begin with Uganda, the last country which I visited.

THE TEACHER

The current president of Uganda, Yoweri Museveni, came to power with the financial help of Quaddafi, the terrorist ruler of Libya, and Cuban soldiers, who used weapons supplied by the former Soviet Union. His forces overthrew a brutal Socialist regime which was headed by Milton Obote, who had overthrown the even more brutal and bloodthirsty regime of the monstrous dictator, Idi Amin. Present conditions in Uganda are more stable, but guerrilla forces continue to operate in some areas.

We flew into Entebbe Airport, which became world-famous when the Israeli forces executed a daring raid to liberate the kidnapped passengers of a hijacked plane. The passage through immigration and customs was slower than usual as the officers asked me many questions.

The capital of Uganda, Kampala, is situated on the shores of the magnificent Lake Victoria, which serves as a waterway for transporting goods between Uganda, Kenya, and Tanzania.

Uganda was formerly a British colony, and Winston Churchill called it the "Pearl of the Nile". It became known as the "Pearl of Africa", but it has lost much of its luster due to the destruction caused by the recent civil wars. It is now beginning to shine once again.

Developing Democracy

The present regime is instituting a form of democracy, and is in the process of creating a multiparty political system. The Communists have donned the garments of democracy and are competing democratically for power. It is imperative that the people of Uganda learn the true nature of Communism so that they can choose wisely.

Do You Believe in Dreams?

I was welcomed at the airport by a delegation which was led by a bishop. One of the first questions he asked was: "Do you believe in dreams?" Before I had a chance to answer, he told me that his wife had dreamed on two successive nights that a tall white man was coming to teach them. This was before they had extended the invitation to me to come to Uganda. Consequently, he did not regard me as another politician, but as the right man to teach them in depth about the dangerous cult called Communism.

The Seminar in Kampala

The attendance had been limited to 200 in order to keep expenses to a minimum. We provide lunch in each one-day seminar for all who attend, and the Crusade's income has diminished recently. The physical, intellectual, and spiritual hunger of those present was evident, and the seminar was a tremendous success.

Most of the 200 who attended were pastors, teachers, and professors. A newspaper reporter and photographer were also present. At the conclusion of my message and the following question-session, a response was made by a pastor who had been chosen for this purpose. After expressing appreciation, he said: "You have stirred a fire which is raging in our hearts. Please tell America that there is a hungry church in Uganda, and we need the message of Rev. Colbert."

The Cubans

We passed a military car which contained Ugandan soldiers accompanied by what appeared to be a Latin American officer. My host informed me that the officer was a Cuban, and that the Cubans are still training the military forces of Uganda.

I left Uganda with a feeling of great gratitude for the remarkable response which my message had received, and also for my personal safety. I am praying that the harvest from the sown seed will be bountiful.

Kenya

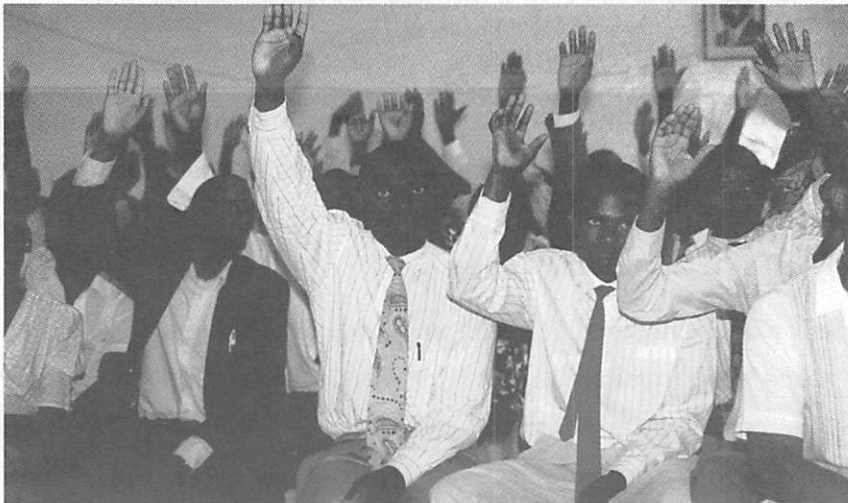

The first seminar during this trip was conducted at the University in Nairobi, Kenya. In addition to the students, there were many professors and clergymen in attendance. After the message, some of the students said they felt cheated because they had never previously been taught the truth about Communism. Most students had been taught that Communism was an alternative economic system that sought to uplift the poor.

Kenya has been regarded as one of the success stories of Africa. Unfortunately, considerable social turbulence has followed the introduction of a multiparty system of government, and the present government is accused of violating the human rights of the leaders of the opposition party.

THE WORLD-RENOVED ENTEBBE AIRPORT IN UGANDA

PLEDGING TO BE TRUTH-LEARNERS AND TRUTH-TELLERS IN UGANDA

LUNCH TIME AT THE SEMINAR AT THE UNIVERSITY OF KENYA

My two colleagues in Kenya are Bishop Bernard Kariuki and Bishop Joseph Kimani. They claim that I have made them famous in Kenya by recruiting them into the anti-communism struggle. Recently, Bishop Kimani was elected to the Kenya Parliament by a landslide vote.

From Nairobi, we flew to the port city of Mombassa, which is located on the shores of the Indian Ocean. There is a large concentration of Moslems in the Mombassa area, and I was informed that a considerable number of Moslem young people attended the Sunday morning church service at which I spoke. The evening meeting was held in a plaza and was attended by people of all faiths, and those who have no faith.

A pastor of a Baptist Church became very enthusiastic, and he is eager to organize seminars for my return.

Are these seminars worthwhile?

They must be when a President of a theological seminary, who had received his doctorate degree from a prestigious Evangelical Seminary in the United States, says, "What you are teaching is a new revelation to all of us."

The prophet Hosea said, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."

(A REPORT ON THE SEMINARS IN MALAWI, ZIMBABWE AND ZAMBIA WILL BE PRESENTED IN THE JULY NEWSLETTER.)

SODOMIC SWIMMING--A PARABLE

The waters of the lake sparkled in the sunlight, and the high school students, on a class outing, gazed at them with eager eyes. The day was hot and steamy, and they longed to plunge into the lake's cooling embrace. But they had just heard the doleful news that the lake was closed to swimmers because a discharge of raw sewage had polluted the waters and made them vehicles for the transmission of grievous diseases. Their genes cried out in protest and urged them to take the risk of a refreshing swim.

One of the accompanying teachers said: "You know what young people are like. It is almost certain that some of them will yield to their desires and plunge into the waters. We have a duty to protect them. We must urge them, if they do swim, to make sure that it is 'safe' swimming, by wearing a wet suit, rubber boots, rubber gloves, and by refraining from immersing their heads in the water."

Another teacher replied, "Surely we must insist that they learn to exercise self-control. Swimming must be prohibited, not tolerated."

The first teacher sneered, "Keep your fanatical, religious ideas to yourself. Don't try to foist your ideas on others. You want the students to abide by your values. You are trying to apply the principle, 'Do unto others as you would wish them to do unto you.' The man who taught that was a religious leader, and mixing religion with education is unconstitutional."

THE CAUSE AND CURE OF CRIME

It was refreshing to hear the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator Joseph Biden, state on the television program, "Meet the Press", of April 17, that he did not know the cause of crime. Most liberal politicians seem to cherish the delusion that crime is caused by poverty. As long as programs to combat crime are based upon this delusion, they are doomed to failure.

The universal sinfulness of human nature is the basic cause of crime. Who among us has not thought, when learning of the sinful or criminal conduct of some individual, "There, but for the grace of God, go I."

The creation of a conscience that will enable the individual to be ruled by God is the key to combatting crime. Family, church, education, and the law have essential and overlapping roles to play in the achievement of this objective.

The consequences of the monopoly of these roles by the government, under the guidance of the American Civil Liberties Union, is now evident in the schools and on streets of this nation.

As the poet Byron says: "The despotism of vice--
 The weakness and the wickedness of luxury--
 The negligence--the apathy--the evils
 Of sensual sloth--produce ten thousand tyrants."

THE LIVELY COMMUNIST CORPSE

Russia

(Moscow Diary--by Mike Davidow)

"The long-awaited draft program of the Communist Party of the Russian Federation (CPRF), Russia's largest party, has appeared. Adopted by the Central Committee March 15, it is being discussed...

The draft program projects a three-stage process: First stage: The Communists, in alliance with the progressive patriotic movement, will struggle for the establishment of a Government of National Confidence... Second stage:... The formation of Soviets, strike committees and other peoples' organizations... Third stage:... Development of socialist society on the basis of the latest technology...

"The document declares that the Party is for the peaceful development of revolution but will not stand aside if force is used against the working people... Its motto is: Russia, Peoples' Power, Socialism." (People's Weekly World, April 2, 1994, page 15)

China

"The Chinese are hiring dispossessed Russian weapons experts; the Chinese are buying ballistic-missile technology; the Chinese are abandoning territorial defense and equipping their forces for power-projection: the Chinese are still profoundly mistrustful of the United States.

"These are, as they say, looming prospects and, given another decade or two, could become ugly ones. In that case, we will once again ask, Who lost China?" (By Charles Horner, Commentary magazine, April 1994, page 38)
