Kinsey's fraud invades the Church

*The sexual revolution was based on a lie.
Judith Reisman has spent thirty years uncovering the truth. (National Review, May 19, 1997)*

The truth she uncovered is that the revolution began with Dr. Alfred Kinsey in 1948. Moreover, all accreditation in the field of American sexology flows from his fraudulent data. Dr. Reisman's primary interest in Kinsey's sexuality data is its toxic impact on children -- as revealed in her latest book, "Kinsey, Crimes & Consequences."

The main pipeline for dispensing Kinseyan sexuality to American school children has been the public schools. Their teachers are meticulously trained by the Sex and Information Council of the United States (SIECUS). Founded in 1964 at the Kinsey Institute in Bloomington, Indiana, SIECUS was created by leading Kinseyan proponents of the emerging American sexuality field. Sex industry entrepreneurs like Hugh Hefner eagerly bankrolled SIECUS. As a result, accredited academic sexperts now uniformly testify before juries and judges that pornography -- once considered a vice -- is harmless today, and even therapeutic.

This week the emerging rival to SIECUS, the National Abstinence Clearinghouse (NAC), telegraphed a startling announcement: After 12 years as president and CEO of SIECUS, Debra Haffner will resign on May 31, 2000. Ms. Haffner is returning to the seminary. But Haffner's dash to the seminary must not be misread as repentance. She is not retreating. Rather, this move is calculated to advance her revolutionary faith. She plans to further "educate" the Church with the SIECUS "anything goes" philosophy. This includes Kinsey's fraudulent claim that, "children are sexual from birth." As a Kinseyan disciple, Haffner's mission has always been to liberate children for sexual activity by:

- Stimulating youngsters with "teaching aids" like SIECUS-sanctioned pornography
- Training students in methods for "safer sex"
- Dispensing condoms in elementary school
- Providing post-puberty abortion services

In 1996, Ms. Haffner took a six-month sabbatical from SIECUS to work as a Research Fellow at the Yale Divinity School. There she conducted independent research on scriptural sex. According to a 1997 SIECUS newsletter, Haffner began her career in sexology 21 years ago. She had been active in a liberal religious faith for more than a decade. But in her first seminary month, she "profoundly realized" that sexology was her "calling." From that experience, she authored "A Time to Speak." In this controversial booklet, Haffner reinterprets scripture to condone Kinsey's "free sex" -- popularized to children by SIECUS.

Coincidentally, while Kinsey's scientific authority is being discredited, Haffner feels "called to a more formalized ministry." She will pursue full-time seminary studies "in order to build the foundation to develop a national ministry on sexuality and religion." Furthermore, Haffner says, "I feel a sense of grace that I am accepting God's call for the next steps in my vocation."

Haffner leaves the SIECUS coffers full and its support base intact. Recently, the government joined pornographers in support of SIECUS' Kinseyan mission. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Division of Adolescent and School Health have granted SIECUS a five-year cooperative agreement to continue its work to promote "school health" across the country.

Concerned citizens ask, "Why?" After more than two decades of the SIECUS brand of "safe sex," sexually transmitted diseases among juveniles have reached epidemic proportions. "Today there are more than 12 million new cases annually" (The Washington Times, Jan. 25, 2000). Half are incurable. But SIECUS keeps hidden the fact that condoms do not protect against Human Papilloma Virus (HPV).

Peter Brandt, spokesman for the National Coalition of Abstinence Education, explains why there is no campaign to protect the health of our children from these deadly, misguided government policies. "[B]ecause ultimately for groups like the Center for Disease Control and Planned Parenthood to come out and say that condoms do not prevent the spread of HPV would really be an admission that they have been operating for years under failed public-health policy." So it is not just professional pride that keeps them silent. The real bottom line is money. If the programs fail and people know it, millions of government dollars flowing into Kinseyan-based programs would dry up.

Since feeling the threat of the National Abstinence Clearinghouse, SIECUS has "gotten religion." NAC has emerged as a major challenge to SIECUS' control over the minds and bodies of our children. To preserve children's health and well-being, NAC is developing "no-condom" policies and is distributing real health-based, abstinence-only curricula to schools.

Despite NAC's healthy results, SIECUS receives the lion's share of government funding. Backed by the folks at CDC, SIECUS is charging ahead of the competition with a new National School Health Education Clearinghouse. This agency will provide access to so-called "model" programs and policies, curricula and curricula evaluations, sexuality education, and teacher training. In short, the same failed Kinseyan-based programs are being recycled. Twenty years ago, doctors in "good communities" might treat one case of venereal disease in a month. However, since the advent of SIECUS, many doctors see such cases daily -- the majority suffering from cancer-producing HPV.

But Ms. Haffner is not satisfied with mainlining Kinsey to our children in school. She is now bringing her "anything goes" gospel into the Church. Yet Christ's teachings on purity, marriage and family living are clear. Only the marital act is sanctioned by Scripture -- which leaves no argument for Haffner's perverted sexuality theories.

For Haffner's tactics bring us back full circle to zoologist Kinsey. In 1948 -- as Reisman discovered -- he simply repackaged the ancient theology for modern sensibilities under a "scientific" covering. Beginning in the post-World War II generation, Kinsey espoused its tenets: Man, as creator, is the measure of all things. Therefore, humans are unbound by moral or biological constraints. In fact, SIECUS' first director, Mary Calderone, called Kinsey's sexual liberation gospel a "new religion." Kinsey caustically berated the negative effect of the "inaccuracies" and "paranoia" fostered by the narrow Christian religion. Now Haffner's mission is to correct these "inaccuracies." Like the proverbial wolf in sheep's clothing, Haffner will minister to the Church the ancient worship of the male and female generative powers -- all in the name of sexuality and reproductive rights.

The aftermath of the Sexual Revolution of the 60s is now painfully obvious. Kinsey has subverted American culture. He called his method science, but religion was always his goal. His pseudo science opened the door to the toleration of more and more perversity in the body politic. And many in the Church have been compromised. Now the high priestess of sexuality training, Debra Haffner, will use the covering of seminary to gain the credentials necessary to complete Kinsey's mission within the Church body.
