

Mass. Residents Learn Fraudulent Basis Of Sex-Ed

CWA Offers Positive Blueprint For Action

By Ed Oliver

March 21, 2001

If Massachusetts parents are wondering what they can do to counter the destructive sex-education programs in the schools, the folks at "Concerned Women for America" are offering a blueprint for action.

Representatives from CWA held a statewide seminar at Lexington's Heritage Hall on Sunday to kick off their "RSVP" program (Restoring Social Virtue and Purity to Massachusetts). Local experts addressed about 75 parents.

The program aims to expose the fraudulent scientific basis of most publicly funded sex education and AIDS-prevention programs. The women at CWA say those programs lean heavily on criminal "research" conducted by Alfred Kinsey, who collected data from a network of child molesters to include in his widely hailed "Kinsey Reports," which were published in 1948 and 1953.

Kinsey's "free love" philosophy is the basis of modern day sex education.

According to CWA, in order for Kinsey to obtain his "data," nine pedophiles molested and raped children aged anywhere from infancy to age 10. The pedophiles recorded their observations for Kinsey, who interpreted the tears, groans and violent cries from the children to be orgasms. Kinsey used the resultant data to argue that all children are sexual beings from birth. Modern educators say it logically follows that children should be taught sex education from the earliest ages.

Kinsey believed all sex is good including, bestiality, incest, homosexuality and pedophilia, CWA says. NAMBLA uses his research to lobby for lower age of consent laws and the "sexual rights" of the child.

The State Director of CWA in Massachusetts, Sandi Martinez, told Massachusetts News the RSVP program teaches parents how to identify what type of sex-ed is in their school by using a "curriculum evaluator."

Then, after they determine if it is a Kinsey based or chastity-based curriculum, the parents

He said 25 to 50 million people have a sexually transmitted disease called HPV that we hear virtually nothing about, probably because it defies the "responsible" preventive steps people are commonly taught such as condom usage. He said it is a leading cause of cervical cancer in women and anal cancer in men. He said most people who spread the disease don't display symptoms except occasional warts. He said the way to prevent infection is to limit sexual activity to one uninfected person for a lifetime.

Several ex-gays from the Manchester based "Re-Creation Ministries" came to tell people that not only is change from homosexuality possible, but it happens.

Steven Durost said that they are people who are recovering from "sexual brokenness." He said they are not trophies and he does not agree with some of the ways religious people are approaching the gay issue.

Durost told Massachusetts News that kids who think they are gay and feel pressured by the schools to follow their inclinations, should realize they have a choice not to act on those inclinations, that there is another way. He explained that those inclinations are often related to past issues of sexual abuse or distant fatherhood issues, and once those hurts or "boulders in their stream of sexuality" are cleared up in a person, a lot of times their natural heterosexual feelings start to flow.

Chester Darling Says State is 'Pedophile'

Attorney Chester Darling of the "Citizens for the Preservation of Constitutional Rights" told the crowd that he is a great believer in respecting differences and individual rights, "But I don't believe in having the government compel us to respect differences as defined by the government."

Darling read from a letter sent to Lexington parents of kindergarten and elementary students on March 12 informing them their children would be shown one of several videotapes having to do with "respecting differences." The letter said that while the videos do not directly address gay or lesbian issues themselves, a follow-up discussion would discuss the derogatory use of the word "gay."

Darling said, "Will those children ask the teacher what gay means? Of course they will." He said no opt-out document was provided with the letter. He pointed out that the letter didn't mention name-calling about fat kids or kids with glasses, but only gays.

Darling said, to applause, that this type of program, if it goes forward in Lexington, is on the verge of litigation and "I'll see the School Committee in Federal Court down at the Moakley Courthouse."

Darling said parents rights are being eroded, trivialized and targeted for destruction.

"The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is a pedophile," said Darling, recalling the "Kinsey's Pedophiles" video shown to the audience earlier.

Darling said he called the state a pedophile because children were solicited by adults throughout the Commonwealth for Fistgate, taxpayer money was used to bus children, teachers attended Fistgate who received credits from the state, and the Department of Education paid people to teach homosexual techniques such as fisting to the kids which could kill them.

Scott Whiteman, one of the parents who is being sued for exposing Fistgate, said the state

"removed, do they want another alternative provided, do they want sex-ed offered after school and have two courses that kids can opt into? That's up to the individual parents and the individual towns," said Martinez.

In addition, local leaders will gather state legislation to see what is mandated for sex education or family life curricula. CWA's National Office and local leaders will prepare state and federal legislation to remove Kinsey's fraudulent sex education

"We're not saying let's remove sex-ed from the schools. We're saying. 'Let's offer parents a choice of an abstinence-based curriculum as an alternative to opt their children into,'" said Martinez.

The CWA chose Lexington to kick off their program because it has been a battleground for parents who object to the schools forcibly exposing their children to harmful sex instruction that conflicts with their values.

Last fall, as a result of publicity about Fistgate, hundreds of Lexington parents crowded school committee meetings demanding to know what the schools were teaching about homosexuality. Parents were defiantly told that the teachers and kids would be trained to teach that homosexual families are normal.

In October, the Lexington schools, in collusion with the liberal Unitarian Church, sponsored a homosexual fair called "Respecting Differences." It featured pro-gay workshops, videos, photo exhibits and a religious panel discussion. It was capped off by a speech from the pulpit by homosexual congressman Barney Frank, who insulted traditional parents by calling them "morons."

In response to what they believed to be biased and incomplete information presented by gay activists and the Lexington schools at "Respecting Differences," the CWA sought to present the "rest of the story" at their RSVP kick-off by presenting speakers who provided medical expertise, testimony from ex-gays, and legal commentary about parent's rights.

Dr. Mildred Jefferson Says Schools Need to be Cleaned

Dr. Mildred Jefferson who is a former surgeon at Boston University Medical Center, told the approximately 75 people gathered in the hall that the schools need to be cleaned up, and parents have to lead the effort. "I want you to think of what you can do, not what you can't do," she admonished.

Jefferson later told Massachusetts News that her main message is, "Children have a right to be children." She said children have a right to be protected from being forced prematurely into psycho-sexual development that is certain to undermine their future mental health and their physical constitutions. She said long-term studies show that children who are exposed to sex far too early find it a "jolting experience" and never quite get over it.

Dr. John Diggs, a specialist in internal medicine and spokesperson for abstinence education, presented medical statistics from the Center for Disease Control.

He said statistics show you are condemning your children if you encourage them to be gay. "Anal sex is the most efficient way to transmit STD's," he said.

The shocking story of how a criminal pervert overthrew America's moral standards — in the name of science

"A scholarly and devastating study revealing the ugly and frighteningly dangerous pseudo-scientific assault on our children's innocence."

— DR. LAURA SCHLESSINGER

Ever since they first appeared in the late Forties, the Kinsey Reports on male and female sexual behavior have been weapons trained against America's moral foundations. Everyone from advocates of easy divorce and "open marriage" in the Sixties to present-day "gay rights" activists cite Alfred Kinsey's data as evidence that their proclivities are not only normal, but widespread.

Yet in this shocking and eye-opening study, Kinsey: Crimes & Consequences — newly revised and expanded with new revelations from Kinsey's dark world — Dr. Judith Reisman reveals that in its "sexual liberation" America has been sold a bill of goods. She gives irrefutable evidence here that Kinsey wasn't the dispassionate researcher of liberal myth, operating scrupulously according to the scientific method — in fact, he was a child molester and a pervert. Reisman also demonstrates that his team, far from being the middle-American pool of scientists that the media portrayed, was filled with homosexuals and serial adulterers voracious enough to make even Bill Clinton blush.

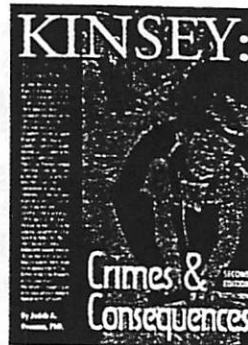

Reisman doesn't stop there. She proves that Kinsey's data was not gathered from the cross-section of normal Americans that he claimed to have interviewed. She shows how Kinsey and his "researchers" used interviews filled with leading questions and given to imprisoned sex offenders and mental patients — and passed the results off in charts and graphs as the sexual habits of ordinary people! Worst of all, she fearlessly tells the truth about how Kinsey and his henchmen molested and victimized innocent children in the name of science — children who come forward in this volume to tell the world what kind of man the much-lionized Dr. Kinsey really was.

Reisman tells the whole grim story here — including:

- ◆ How Kinsey popularized the idea that sex was merely a matter of biology, not of morality
- ◆ The facts about the 1,400 criminals and sex offenders that Kinsey classified as "normal" in his reports
- ◆ Scientific procedure? Hardly! How Kinsey violated all the basic rules for scientific procedure
- ◆ Why Kinsey's surveys showed a high degree of perversion in the general population: how he and his team knowingly falsified the data they collected
- ◆ The revolting truth about how Kinsey's researchers coaxed the answers they wanted out of their unsuspecting research subjects
- ◆ The truth about pornography: how (contrary to Kinsey's claims that it's harmless) it triggers sudden and irrevocable changes in the viewer's brain
- ◆ Kinsey's war on fathers: his claim that 95 percent of American men had violated sex-crimes laws — and why these claims are hogwash
- ◆ The chilling evidence that Kinsey and his team aided and abetted the molestation of large numbers of children
- ◆ Prostitutes: how Kinsey classified them as "married women" in order to tip his data on women toward perversion
- ◆ The Nazi child molester on whom Kinsey relied for much of his data
- ◆ Alfred Kinsey: the truth behind the myths — including the bizarre circumstances of how his perversions led to his untimely death
- ◆ Kinsey's mysterious connection with Satanist Aleister Crowley
- ◆ Kinsey's reach: why his data is still quoted widely in literature on sexuality — even religious journals! — although it's been thoroughly discredited

- ◆ How's Kinsey's sinister hand reaches as far as United Nations educational programs — thus spreading his poison around the world
- ◆ Hundreds of examples of how law journals continue to this day to cite Kinsey as an authority — with terrible consequences for our society
- ◆ Kinsey's grim legacy: the enormous changes in law, medicine, science and education that his reports have inspired — including relaxed sex-crimes penalties, the normalization of homosexuality, removal of all restrictions on pornography, sex education in schools, and much, much more

Dr. Reisman on the real purpose of Kinsey's researches:

Kinsey's personal motive for his research was no mystery. He hated the way America's Christian-based law constrained America's sexual and moral life. All nations are inherently religious, even under the mask of atheism. The "Grand Scheme" shared by Kinsey and like-minded eugenic and legal elites would do no less than gut the Old and New Testaments as America's founding common law order. Kinsey's closeted cadre were at war. They would deconstruct the common law, anointing science as the nation's religion and scientists as the new priest class. . . .

Kinsey was, no doubt, proud of his key position in the science clergy. In the end, it is not surprising that an official finding of Reece's Congressional Committee was that the Foundation-sponsored Kinsey Reports were "deliberately designed as an attack on Judaic-Christian morality." Kinsey's human experiments on children give us the glimpse into the widespread, far-reaching network of New Biology scientists — while their current traffic in fetal parts hints at where the new/old religion is going. America can no longer deny the reality of what the sexual revolution has wrought on our own shores. . . . As man does what he will, with no honor to the sacred and no limit to the profane, all Americans are in peril in our now unwarred cities.

"The Sexual Revolution was based on a lie. Dr. Judith Reisman has spent thirty years uncovering the truth."

— NATIONAL REVIEW

"In the course of producing my documentary — Kinsey's Paedophiles — it became clear that every substantive allegation Reisman made was not only true but thoroughly sourced with documentary evidence — despite the Kinsey Institute's reluctance to open its files."

HISTORY

Teaching, writing & telling lies

Bob Pierce, a retired senior editorial writer for the largest newspaper in South Carolina, The State in Columbia, once told me that as much as 5 percent of what you read in a typical daily newspaper is a lie. Because in interviews some people lie to reporters through snow jobs, sugarcoating and spins, and sometimes reporters screw up.

The newspapers record history as it happens, and history, therefore, as printed in books is part baloney.

And that's before considering that some history writers have a problem with the truth in their personal lives.

Two months ago, Joseph Ellis won the Pulitzer Prize in History for his best-selling book,

"Founding Brothers: The Revolutionary Generation."

Last week, The Boston Globe exposed Ellis. A revered history professor at Mount Holyoke College (Mass.), he had been lying to students in his college classrooms for years about serving in the Vietnam War and about his involvement afterward in the antiwar and civil rights movements.

Ellis fabricated stories about his personal battlefield experiences, which he shared with his students in a course on Vietnam and American Culture at Mount Holyoke and at nearby Amherst, two prestigious women's colleges.

Ellis told students he was an infantry platoon leader and airborne soldier in Vietnam in 1965-66, and that his unit was involved in an operation in My Lai shortly before the notorious atrocity there in 1968, when several hundred civilians were massacred by Americans. All of this, he claimed, turned him into a antiwar advocate, "motivated to do so by what he had seen in Vietnam." The lies made Ellis more of a hero to young people, and made their anguish over Vietnam come alive.

One of Ellis' students told the Globe, recalling Ellis' views of the war from what he said in the class: "He was a veteran who came back and participated in the antiwar movement. So his perspective is very liberal."

As it turns out, Ellis was never in Vietnam. Instead, he was sheltered in graduate school at Yale University during the period of his tales. He went on Army active duty in 1969, and after two months of officer training at Fort Gordon, Ga., was assigned to teach history at the US Military Academy at West Point, where he finished his tour.

Also, as part of his war fabrications, Ellis claimed that his Vietnam duty included an assignment in Saigon on the staff of Gen. William C. Westmoreland, the Vietnam commander, and that later he gave his observations about Westmoreland to David Halberstam, the author of the 1972 best-selling book, "The Best and the Brightest." According to the Globe, Halberstam said he does not recall ever meeting Ellis and said he was not a source for Ellis' book.

In interviews, lectures to students and statements to friends over the years, Ellis also claimed he scored the winning touchdown for his high school football team in the last game of his senior year. But according to the Globe, his school yearbook doesn't list him as a player. And during his senior year, his school lost its final two games.

The Globe reported that over the years Ellis also exaggerated his involvement in recruiting black students from the South in 1967 and 1968 for a Yale summer program.

Ellis' book, "Founding Brothers," has been on the New York Times best-selling list for 26 weeks; last week it was No. 10.

According to the book's jacket, it's about the "intertwined lives of the founders of the American republic — John Adams, Aaron Burr, Ben Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison and George Washington." And Ellis "shows us the private character behind the public personas."

For that, he was awarded a Pulitzer Prize. Fortunately for the Pulitzer people, it came before Ellis' own private persona was reported by the Globe.

How can we trust his book — a history book of all things — now that we know the author is a confessed liar? He has apologized to his family, friends and former students, but not to Vietnam veterans.

Betraying students in bad enough; the highest purpose of a college or university is transferring truth to the next generation. Ellis, 57, never should be allowed behind the podium of a classroom again.

But false teaching is just one of the disturbing matters about all this. There are two others:

(1) When the Globe broke the story, rather than express outrage, the president of Holyoke, Joanne V. Creighton, defended Ellis and criticized the newspaper. In a released statement, she said, "We at the college do not know what public interest the Globe is trying to serve through a story of this nature."

That's an even greater academic disgrace than Ellis' fraudulent behavior.

(2) Ellis is an example of what happened to America over Vietnam: The liberal antiwar protesters — including the phonies, fakers and pony-tailed riff raff, aided by Hollywood, academia and mainstream media — got the upper hand in public attitudes about the war as the returning real patriots faded silently into society. The new left perpetuated a grave and negative myth about the Vietnam War and the young patriots who shared the burden of citizenship in fighting it.

All of which tells more about America than about Joseph Ellis.
